Negotiations begin as ‘cliff’ draws nearer

■ Obama says most Americans on his side

By Ben Feller
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An economic calamity looming, President Barack Obama on Friday signaled willingness to compromise with Republicans, declaring he was not “wedded to every detail” of his tax-and-spending approach to prevent deep and widespread pain in the new year. But he insisted his re-election gave him a mandate to raise taxes on wealthier Americans.

“The majority of Americans agree with my approach,” said Obama, brimming with apparent confidence in his first White House statement since securing a second term.

Trouble is, the Republicans who run the House plainly do not agree with his plans. Speaker John Boehner insisted that raising tax rates as Obama wants “will destroy jobs in America.”

So began the “fiscal cliff” political maneuvering that will determine which elected power center — the White House or the House — bends more on its promises to voters. The outcome will affect tens of millions of Americans, given that the tax hikes and budgets cuts set to kick in Jan. 1 could spike unemployment and bring on a new recession.

An exhausting presidential race barely history, Washington was back quickly to governing on deadline, with agreement on a crucial goal but divi-

KU: Pollution fix not as costly as feared

By Chuck Stinnett
cstinnett@thegleaner.com

The cost to Kentucky Utilities Co. customers of reducing pollution at power plants in the coming years will be nearly $30 per year less than originally expected, the company said Thursday.

Late last year, KU estimated that the costs of installing environmental controls would add $7.50 per month to the average residential customer’s bill in 2016, amounting to a 9.7-percent increase.

But now, those costs are projected to amount to $5.10 per month, or a 6.6-percent increase, KU said. That’s nearly one-third less than originally planned.

KU and sister company Louisville Gas & Electric Co. said that because of what they called the “timely actions” of the Kentucky Public Service Commission, which reviewed and approved their environmental compliance plans, they were able to be among the first utilities in the country to begin purchasing pollution control equipment, enabling them to negotiate attractive prices.

“We realize that customers’ bills are still in-

Petraeus resigns from CIA, citing affair

By Kimberly Dozier
and Connie Cass
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — David Petraeus, the retired four-star general renowned for taking charge of the military campaigns in Iraq and then Afghanistan, abruptly resigned Friday as director of the CIA, admitting to an extramarital affair.

The affair was discovered during an FBI investigation, according to officials briefed on the developments. They spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to publicly discuss the matter. It was unclear what the FBI was investigating or when it became aware of the affair.

Petraeus’ resignation shocked Washington’s intelligence and political communities. It was a sudden end to the public career of the best-known general of the post 9/11 wars, a man sometimes mentioned as a potential Republican presidential candidate. His service was effusively praised Friday in statements from lawmakers of both parties.

Petraeus, who turned 60 on Wednesday, told CIA employees in a statement that he had met with President Barack Obama at the White House on Thursday

Judd doesn't rule out run for U.S. Senate

■ But actress encourages solidarity

By Roger Alford
Associated Press

FRANKFORT— Actress Ashley Judd isn't ruling out a run for U.S. Senate in Kentucky.

Democrats have been promoting Judd, a former Kentuckian now living in Tennessee, as a challenger to Senate Republican Leader Mitch McConnell in 2014.

In a statement Friday, Judd, a Democratic political activist, sidestepped the question of whether she would re-establish a residence in Kentucky and run against McConnell.

"I cherish Kentucky, heart and soul, and while I'm very honored by the consideration, we have just finished an election, so let's focus on coming together to keep moving America's families, and especially our kids, forward," she said.

Judd, a regular at University of Kentucky basketball games and the Kentucky Derby, has starred in such movies as "Kiss the Girls," "Double Jeopardy," "Where the Heart Is," and "High Crimes." She is married to three-time Indianapolis 500 winner Dario Franchitti and is an annual spectator at the race.

So far, no Democrats have stepped forward to challenge McConnell, a political powerhouse in his home state who already has $6.8 million in the bank for his re-election campaign.

Even so, the Louisville Republican is certain to be targeted again by Democrats, just as he was in 2008 when he won re-election to a fifth term and gained the distinction of being Kentucky's longest serving senator. McConnell spent some $20 million on his last election, beating Democrat Bruce Lunsford, a wealthy Kentucky businessman, by 6 percentage points.

The McConnell campaign was complimentary of Judd on Friday, but critical of Democratic U.S. Rep. John Yarmuth of Louisville who was the first to publicly tout Judd as a candidate.

"Sen. McConnell and his wife are big fans of Ashley Judd's movies and appreciate her energy, especially when it comes to bringing young people into the political process," said McConnell campaign manager Jesse Benton.

"Most of this speculation is being stirred up by John Yarmuth, who appears to have an unhealthy obsession with Sen. McConnell that may impress the Obama crowd in D.C., but sure doesn't help Kentucky. If Mr. Yarmuth would like to try his luck in a U.S. Senate race, we'll be happy to pay his filing fee, but until then, the senator will be focusing on the people of Kentucky rather than entertaining the congressman's interest in his election."

McConnell sparked a Republican revival in Kentucky nearly three decades ago, helping to pick off Democrats in the state's federal delegation that was sparse on Republicans. After this week's election, Republicans now hold five of Kentucky's six U.S. House seats and both of the state's U.S. Senate seats.

Kentucky also has built a track record of voting for Republican presidential candidates. On Tuesday, Republican Mitt Romney bested President Barack Obama in 116 of Kentucky's 120 counties.

New Hope rescue center applauded

I would like to take the opportunity to brag on the kindhearted folks at New Hope Animal Rescue Center. New Hope Animal Rescue Center is a very much appreciated and highly proactive asset to Henderson and Henderson County. Paula Hawkins and her staff work tirelessly to ensure that animals are going to be put into warm and loving homes. Her dedication to the animals is endless, and that makes her a great person. I recently adopted a dog from New Hope, and I was blown away with the kindness, sincerity and professionalism the people who volunteer at the center showed me while adopting Dottie. Whether you agree or not, animals are people too. They deserve the same amount of respect that we humans expect. And there is absolutely no reason to mistreat an animal. I encourage those who have some spare time to check the center out and perhaps volunteer a couple days a week or donate some much needed items to ensure that the animals at New Hope are continuously being cared for at optimal levels. Keep up the great work, New Hope!

America on slow drift to total socialism

Does the re-election of Obama mean we are on the road to total socialism? Many will say yes. I believe we are ultimately destined to become a socialist nation. More and more people seem to want it and look at all the people entering our country from socialist and even communist nations. That is what they knew at home and will want and expect here. We have been on the road of creeping socialism since FDR and the 1930s. Thomas Jefferson said (around 1800), "It will be the natural order of things for government to grow larger and larger and for personal liberties to dwindle." It does seem he knew what was going to happen over the next 200 plus years. Social Security, rural electrification co-ops, workman's comp, unemployment compensation, Medicaid, Medicare and Medicare Part D are all socialistic programs. How many (if any) of them do you and I want to eliminate? I thought so — none. So the slow drift to total socialism will continue — at least for the next four years. It is time to take the best ideas of both parties and work together. Compromise is the key word. Will it happen? Time will tell. For the sake of our country — it better! The people have spoken. If nothing gets done, Republicans will get the blame.

Hal Branson, Henderson County

We should try to make a difference every day

I missed it, and so did a lot of other people — National Make a Difference Day, Oct. 27. Oh well, it doesn't make any difference, since every day is the right time to try to make a difference — in our own lives, in the lives of others and in the world — spiritual, physical, emotional, whatever. It's our business, or should be, responsibility and privilege — what people do about our efforts is their business. Every day let us pray for God to use us to touch somebody, somewhere and somehow. The world would be a better place if we all made such an effort.

GOP can only blame itself for election failures

By James L. Hartley

President Obama is the worst president ever. We've heard it from conservatives for years, and since we all know that conservatives never lie, it must be true. Now, some may question the honesty of that statement, coming as it does from people who voted for George W. Bush not once, but twice, but not I. I know the true value of conservative honesty. So here's an honest fact that the GOP is going to have to face: In an election cycle where Republicans were poised to gain seats in the House, regain control of the Senate AND win the White House, the GOP did the exact opposite. They lost seats in the House and Senate and lost their best shot at the presidency. In addition, they lost hundreds of seats in state legislatures across the nation. How bad must your candidate be if, when given the choice between your guy and the socialist, secret-Muslim, Kenyan-born, worst president in history, we Americans stuck by Obama? Ouch!

In the blame-storm following their defeat, the GOP is pointing fingers. Some are more than willing to make it a matter of race, already talking up Marco Rubio 2016, as if putting a pretty brown face on their extreme social conservatism will make it more palatable to moderates. I hope they follow that piece of advice, because they've got a surprise coming. Ask Hermann Cain. Ask Alan West. Ask Mia Love. It's not a race thing. We didn't reject Mitt Romney because he was white. We didn't reject conservative congressional candidates across the nation because of their race. We rejected them because they were unwilling to find a middle ground in a nation that has embraced social tolerance on issues of reproduction, religion and gay rights. We rejected them because we've caught them lying so much about Obama that we can no longer trust them to tell us 2 plus 2 equal 4. We rejected them because their fiscal mantra of lower taxes for the rich hasn't done a bit of good for the middle class and poor of this country. We rejected conservatism without compromise. We rejected the birthers, the climate change deniers, the anti-intellectuals who have come to dominate the GOP and who are truly responsible for their pathetic showing in this election. And if conservatives didn't get that message this time, then they deserve what's coming to them in the next election. They have a choice. They can continue to listen to people like Karl Rove, Rush Limbaugh, and Sarah Palin, and find themselves becoming more and more irrelevant. Or they can listen to the American electorate and its changing demographics, and stay relevant. We are not a simple people. These are not simple times. We do not need simple minds, unable to adapt to change and unable to deal with complexity. You cannot change reality by denying it, as the GOP continues to do. You cannot tell lies and expect us to believe you. You cannot pander to us and expect us to trust you. You cannot insult us and expect us to vote for you.

The writer is a Henderson resident.

Republicans must learn from dreadful election

By Star Parker
Scripps Howard News Service

Disbelief is the word that defines the Republican state of mind in the wake of the 2012 re-election of President Barack Obama. The obvious questions are: "How can Americans have re-elected a president who has presided over an economy where unemployment still hovers at 8 percent?" And, "How can Americans have re-elected a president who still doesn't grasp that his big-government policies are what have blocked our economic recovery?" The Republican Party needs to take responsibility for this disaster. Nothing in the outcome of this election is a surprise. The realities that produced these election results have been looming before us not for months, but for years. Yet Republicans have made a point of ignoring it all. Now, "the chickens have come home to roost." What are these realities? The profoundly changing demographics of the nation. And, the challenge of getting a nation that is already addicted to government off it. I wrote last April regarding an analysis done by Ron Brownstein in National Journal: "Brownstein estimates that Barack Obama could be re-elected with as little as 39 percent of the white vote. He notes that in 2008, when Obama was elected with just 43 percent of the white vote, it was the first time ever that a presidential candidate was victorious with double-digit losses of white voters." In a column I wrote a month ago, I noted: "What was once the exception to the rule in America — not being white, not being married, not having traditional values on family, sex and abortion — is becoming the rule. And these constituencies are becoming sufficiently large to elect a president." I explained 10 years ago in my book, "Uncle Sam's Plantation," how big government and welfare-state policies were destroying black communities. Ironically, the Republican political establishment, and particularly this year's candidate, Mitt Romney, presented themselves as the party of businessmen who know how economies work. Well, businessmen pay attention to their markets. They make sure that they understand their product and present it clearly and that they stay attuned to their customer base. But Republican Party operatives ignored both — clear definition of their product and savvy marketing to a diverse base of customers. Instead, they chose wishful thinking: simply hope that more and more white voters will turn out and vote Republican to make up for their shrinking part of the electorate. When polls showed what was really happening, these same Republican operatives chose to deny them, too, charging they were biased. We can win our country back.

Low- and middle-income blacks and Latinos are hurt disproportionately by a sluggish economy that can only be revived by less government spending and regulation, and low taxes. They just need someone to care to focus on their communities and explain these dynamics to them. They need to get their kids out of public schools, a cause that only conservatives champion. And they need to understand that they have everything to gain by getting out of the entitlement programs that the left tells them they need. The last thing low-income earners need is to pay payroll taxes when they could save this money and build wealth. And the last thing they need is government bureaucrats running their health care. When the only message blacks and Latinos get is from left wing politicians and media telling them they need government to take care of them, what can we expect but what we just saw in this election? Business is also about knowing that there is no short cut around hard work. Republicans must do more than showcase a few black and brown faces at their convention every four years and call this outreach. Conservatives must get into black and Latino communities, talk to their clergy and community leaders, and explain how conservative policies of limited government and traditional values will save their communities and our nation.

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court said Friday it will consider eliminating the government’s most potent weapon against racial discrimination at polling places since the 1960s. The court acted three days after a diverse coalition of voters propelled President Barack Obama to a second term in the White House.

With a look at affirmative action in higher education already on the agenda, the court is putting a spotlight on race by re-examining the ongoing necessity of laws and programs aimed at giving racial minorities access to major areas of American life from which they once were systematically excluded.

“This is a term in which many core pillars of civil rights and pathways to opportunity hang in the balance,” said Debo Adegbile, acting president and director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

In an order Friday, the justices agreed to hear a constitutional challenge to the part of the landmark Voting Rights Act that requires all or parts of 16 states with a history of discrimination in voting to get federal approval before making any changes in the way they hold elections.

The high court considered the same issue three years ago but side-stepped what Chief Justice John Roberts then called “a difficult constitutional question.”

The new appeal from Shelby County, Ala., near Birmingham, says state and local governments covered by the law have made significant progress and no longer should be forced to live under oversight from Washington.

“The America that elected and re-elected Barack Obama as its first African-American president is far different from when the Voting Rights Act was first enacted in 1965. Congress unwisely reauthorized a bill that is stuck in a Jim Crow-era time warp. It is unconstitutional,” said Edward Blum, director of the not-for-profit Project on Fair Representation, which is funding the challenges to the voting rights law and affirmative action.

But defenders of the law said there is a continuing need for it and pointed to the Justice Department’s efforts to block voter ID laws in South Carolina and Texas, as well as a redistricting plan in Texas that a federal court found discriminated against the state’s large and growing Hispanic population.

Sex abuse case against Syracuse’s Fine tossed

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Federal authorities have dropped their investigation into one of the sexual abuse claims that cost a Syracuse University assistant basketball coach his job, threw a top-ranked team into turmoil and threatened the career of Hall of Fame coach Jim Boeheim.

After a probe spanning nearly a year, U.S. Attorney Richard Hartunian said Friday there was not enough evidence to support a claim that Bernie Fine had molested a boy in 2002 in a Pittsburgh hotel room.

It wasn’t clear yet whether Fine, 66, could get his job back.

His lawyers, Karl Sleight, Donald Martin and David Botsford, said in a statement that they were not surprised by the decision.

“The damage inflicted upon Bernie and his family is simply immeasurable,” the lawyers said. “Bernie hopes and prays that the lesson learned and remembered is that a rush to judgment has irreversible consequences.”

The investigation erupted in the glare of a spotlight on child abuse

Government knocks down illegal homes

LENASIA — Bulldozers moved in on a South African town Friday, destroying homes that officials said were constructed on illegally sold land, despite efforts by protesters to stop the demolitions.

The housing department of the province of Gauteng said it demolished 14 houses on Friday in Lenasia. The department said it had identified 113 houses in the area that it said were illegally built on land intended for government houses.

“Investigations by the department’s anti-fraud and corruption unit revealed that fraudsters sold several stands (for amounts) ranging from $285 to $10,860 and issued buyers with fraudulent deeds of sale which bore the department’s official logo,” it said in a statement.

Group: U.S. needs to do more in Kony hunt

KAMPALA — The hunt for the African warlord Joseph Kony is hopeless without more troops, an advocacy group said Friday, urging American forces to “play a more operational role” in the vast Central Africa jungle.

A year after President Barack Obama sent 100 U.S. Special Forces to help regional governments eliminate Kony, the U.S.-based Enough Project said the military mission is “unsustainable” because African troops face multiple challenges that limit their ability to locate the rebels.

The American troops play only an advisory role and are not involved in combat operations against the rebels. Uganda leads about 2,500 African Union troops in the hunt for Kony, whose LRA rebels are accused of mass murder and of recruiting children to become soldiers or sex slaves.

Nuclear meeting planned in Tehran

Officials from Iran and the U.N. nuclear watchdog will meet in Tehran next month in an attempt to restart stalled nuclear talks, the international agency announced Friday.

Such a meeting would be the first since early summer. The talks have been halted over Iran’s reluctance to grant access to sites that the U.N. nuclear agency suspects could have been used in secret work on nuclear weapons. Iran denies any such work, and says all of its nuclear activities are for peaceful purposes.

The spokeswoman for the International Atomic Energy Agency announced the talks will take place Dec. 13.

Muslims protest constitution’s base

CAIRO — Over 10,000 ultraconservative Muslims demonstrated Friday in downtown Cairo to demand that Egypt’s new constitution be based on the rulings of Islamic law, or Shariah, in the latest tussle over the role of religion in the country’s future.

The writing of the constitution has been fraught with controversy since last year’s political uprising that toppled longtime autocrat Hosni Mubarak and ushered in the rise of formerly repressed Islamists to power.

But Islamists themselves are not in agreement over the interpretation of Shariah and its place in the document.

Mass exodus from Syria sign of ferocity of violence since '11

By Zeina Karam
and John Heilprin
Associated Press

BEIRUT — As many as 11,000 people fled Syria in 24 hours, some of them desperately clambering through a razor-wire fence into Turkey on Friday to escape fierce fighting between rebels and government forces for control of a border town.

The exodus is a sign of the escalating ferocity of the violence, which has killed more than 36,000 people since March 2011. Despite the bloodshed, embattled President Bashar Assad insisted there was no civil war in Syria, saying in a rare TV appearance that he was protecting Syrians against “terrorism” supported from abroad.

The flood of Syrians into neighboring Turkey, Jordan and Lebanon was “the highest that we have had in quite some time,” said Panos Moutztis, the U.N. refugee agency’s regional coordinator for the region.

From 2,000 to 3,000 people are fleeing Syria daily, and the recent surge brings the number registered with the agency to more than 408,000, he said.

During the 24-hour period that began Thursday, 9,000 Syrians crossed into Turkey, including 70 who were wounded and two who then died, U.N. officials said. Jordan and Lebanon each absorbed an additional 1,000 refugees.

The largest flow into Turkey came from the fighting at Ras al-Ayn in the predominantly Kurdish oil-producing northeastern province of al-Hasaka. The town hugs the border, practically adjacent to the Turkish town of Ceylanpinar.

Pentagon moves to silence SEALs

WASHINGTON — The military is cracking down on special operations troops who share knowledge of their secret missions for profit, punishing seven Navy SEALs, including one involved in the mission to get Osama bin Laden, who moonlighted as advisers on a combat video game.

Current and former SEALs, including the author of a tell-all book on the bin Laden raid, complain they’re getting mixed messages from the military, which likes to see itself on big and small screens on its own terms.

The seven SEALs are being reprimanded and having their pay docked for sharing information with the designers of “Medal of Honor: Warfighter,” by video game company EA, according to military officials speaking on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the investigations publicly.

The men will remain in the SEAL teams, but were punished for working on the video without their command’s permission, revealing classified information by sharing the tactics they use and showing designers some of their specially designed combat equipment unique to their unit, the officials said.

AP sources: U.S. weighs nuke deal

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration is considering a new approach in negotiations to curb Iran’s nuclear program that would ease economic sanctions faster than previously offered if Tehran makes greater concessions than it has ever discussed. The proposal is one of several options being discussed before another round of negotiations between world powers and the Islamic republic, officials said Friday.

The U.S. aim is to try to prevent the next set of talks with Iran from failing like all previous efforts.

The strategizing is taking place amid an upsurge in diplomatic activity. The U.N.’s International Atomic Energy Agency announced Friday talks of its own in Tehran in December. Negotiations bogged down last summer over permission to investigate secret work on nuclear weapons.

Craigslist plot gives teen life sentence

AKRON — A remorseful teenager was sentenced Friday to life in prison with no chance for parole for his role in a deadly plot to lure men desperate for work with phony Craigslist job offers.

“I thought it was something horrible,” a grim-faced Brogan Rafferty, 17, told Judge Lynne Callahan before he was sentenced.

If his life has been hell since the killings last year, “They must be living in it,” said Rafferty, gesturing with his cuffed hands at victims’ relatives who crowded the court. He said they also were victims of his crimes.

Rafferty told the judge, who will preside at the January trial of alleged triggerman Richard Beasley, 53, that his mentor is evil and deceitful and said he wished he had taken the opportunity to flee and stop the killings.

“There were many options I couldn’t see at the time,” said Rafferty, who remained composed during the sentencing, watching with a slight frown as relatives of the victims addressed the court.

U.N. says 11,000 Syrians have fled

By Suzan Fraser

ANKARA, Turkey — At least 11,000 Syrian refugees have fled their country in single day, pouring into Turkey, Jordan and Lebanon with children and dozens of wounded, U.N. officials said Friday. Some desperately climbed over razor-wire border fences to seek safety.

Most of the surge in refugees was due to the 9,000 fleeing into Turkey, including more than 70 who were wounded, U.N. officials said. Jordan and Lebanon each absorbed another 1,000 refugees.

The civil war in Syria has killed more than 36,000 people since an uprising against President Bashar Assad’s regime began in March 2011.

Panos Moutztis, the U.N. refugee agency’s regional coordinator for the region, described the flood of people as “the highest that we have had in quite some time.”

He said the escalation — much more than the average 2,000 to 3,000 Syrians fleeing daily — brings the number of Syrian refugees registered with the agency to more than 408,000.

The new arrivals bring the number of refugees in Turkey to around 120,000.

Turkish media showed video of refugees climbing through the barbed-wire fence separating the two countries. U.N. refugee agency spokesman Adrian Edwards told The Associated Press that the refugees had crossed into the Turkish border province of Sanliurfa.

ELECTION 2012

Why didn't estimated 94 million Americans vote?

By Thomas Hargrove
Scripps Howard News Service

WASHINGTON— President Barack Obama and Republican challenger Mitt Romney failed to convince an estimated 94 million eligible Americans to cast ballots this month, making none-of-the-above the actual and easy winner.

The unofficial tally currently shows Obama with 61 million votes and Romney with 58 million votes. After election officials finish processing hundreds of thousands of absentee and provisional ballots, Obama's final tally could reach 64 million.

But no U.S. president in the last century has come remotely close to winning as many votes as there are people who refuse to participate in the democratic process.

"Democracy is in trouble," said Curtis Gans, director of the Center for the Study of the American Electorate that tracks voter turnout rates.

"I really worry when people talk about this issue because they talk about quick fixes with things like early voting," Gans said. "But we really need to tackle the big problems like voter education, to rekindle some trust in government."

A growing number of thoughtful Americans are posting and publishing arguments on why they chose not to support the electoral process.

"There is a lot of faith in the institution of voting that, I think, may not be warranted," said Michael Magdzik, 21, a political science student at Yale University who last month published in the local newspaper an essay titled "Why I Don't Vote."

Magdzik is unhappy with the Electoral College, the process created by the Constitution's Founding Fathers to establish electors who confirm the results of presidential elections. The impact of this system creates battleground states that determine an election's outcome while rendering most other areas moot.

But he's also driven by the logic of mathematics.

"In the aggregate, voting matters," Magdzik said. "But for any one individual, one vote rarely matters. It just doesn't matter in a statistical sense."

Butler Shaffer, a law professor at Southwestern Law School in Los Angeles, has published an essay titled "The Voting Ritual" which calls balloting a "politicoholic addiction" intended "to conspire with a multitude of others to despoil you of your liberties or property."

"I haven't voted in 48 years now," Shaffer said this week while taking a break from grading papers. "I also don't molest school children or do any business in brothels."

He makes the statistical argument that it doesn't pay to be one of millions. "It is part of the ritual held out to make us think that we are in control of things. But we really aren't."

Shaffer's major concern is a personal decision not to participate in the blunt force of politics. Why force his will on others just because he is part of a majority?

"What are we doing when we vote? Using that force, the violence that is implicit in the arrangement," he said.

Meanwhile, the First Amendment still guarantees his right to argue publicly.

"My students say, 'If you don't vote, you can't complain.' But I always can complain. Just listen to me," Shaffer said.

Wisconsin election cycle finally closes

By Dinesh Ramde
Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Candidates approving this message have been at it for two years in Wisconsin, along with the robocalls, angry commercials, emails begging for campaign donations and glossy political mail.

Think you had it bad over the last few months? Don't complain to Wisconsin voters, who have endured a continuous stream of elections, recalls and recounts since 2010, including one statewide election each month between April and June.

With Tuesday's presidential and congressional races finally over in this battleground state, residents are settling in to a campaign respite.

Some said they're answering their phones again. Local advertisers have access to the prime television spots that had been monopolized by wealthy buyers of campaign and issue ads. Campaign volunteers suddenly have free time.

"I'm going to catch up on all the reading I've been putting off for a year," said 77-year-old Luonne Dumak, who estimates she spent eight to 20 hours per week volunteering at a GOP headquarters in southeastern Wisconsin for the last two years, including helping Republican Gov. Scott Walker beat back a recall effort.

"But you know," the retired office worker added, "in the spring there's another state Supreme Court race."

Many local voters probably don't want to hear that.

The action started in 2010, when Walker defeated Milwaukee Mayor Tom Barrett in a governor's race that cost $37.4 million, a record at the time. Walker moved swiftly to curtail collective bargaining rights for most public employees, sparking massive protests and prompting 14 Democratic state senators to flee the state in a futile attempt to block the plan.

Democrats then gathered enough signatures to force several Republican officeholders, including Walker, into recall elections as payback. Republicans responded by doing the same to a few Democrats.

But since the governor couldn't face a recall until he'd been in office for at least a year, Democrats in the meantime transformed an otherwise quiet Wisconsin Supreme Court election into a heated referendum on Walker.

A few months later, in the summer of 2011, nine state senators from across the state faced recall elections stemming from their positions on the labor law. Democrats defended their three incumbents and also took two of six seats from Republicans.

Five more elections arrived in rapid succession this year. Then a Republican presidential primary in April was followed by a Democratic primary in May to decide who would challenge Walker in the June recall election.

In August, four Republicans squared off in a bruising primary for the U.S. Senate. It came to an end Tuesday, with the deciding of the presidential and U.S. Senate elections that had attracted national attention and money to the state.

Volunteer Rita Pincsak, right, staffs a Republican phone bank in Waukesha, Wis. With Tuesday's election finally over, Wisconsinites are entering a period of unusual political calm. long to organize volunteers, make phone calls and knock on doors, she said it felt weird to have all the elections come to an abrupt end.

"It's certainly different. We were saying, 'What are we going to do now that we don't have a campaign to work on?'" she said.

So many elections in such a short time could have caused Wisconsin voters to burn out. But the opposite was true. While voter turnout nationally was lower Tuesday than it was in 2008, the number of Wisconsin voters who turned out increased by about 80,000.

Coin flip could decide Walton, Ky., city council race

The Associated Press

WALTON, Ky. — One of the six seats for the Walton City Council is undetermined after two people on the ballot tied for sixth place.

The Kentucky Enquirer reports that Robert McDonald and Olivia Ballou both received 669 votes.

Boone County Clerk Kenny Brown said he is seeking guidance from the state Board of Elections, but it would appear that a coin may determine who serves in the seat.

"I am waiting for clarification from the State Board of Elections, but we are pretty sure the (Kentucky Revised Code) says a tie is resolved by a coin toss," Brown said.

Brown said if the Tuesday deadline for a recanvass passes without such a request, officials will then set a date to flip a coin.

McDonald said it was a valuable lesson about the importance of every vote. He said his wife, Katie, didn't make it to the polls.

Superstorm gave push to online voting

By Caleb Garling
San Francisco Chronicle

It takes a storm of historic proportions to push voting technology into the digital age.

Last Saturday, New Jersey said it would permit voters displaced by SuperStorm Sandy to vote electronically. Though voters have to confirm their e-vote with a follow-up mail-in ballot, county clerks said they sent ballots to storm victims that could be cast by email or fax.

"This has been an extraordinary storm that has created unthinkable destruction," Lt. Gov. Kim Guadagno said in a statement about the decision. "To help alleviate pressure on polling places, we encourage voters to either use electronic voting or the extended hours at county offices to cast their vote."

In California, only overseas and military personnel protected under the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act can cast ballots via email. Otherwise, no state precincts allow voters to cast their ballots via email, and the state hasn't considered building a secure Web portal for voters.

Why does it take a catastrophe for any state to tap an everyday communication medium as a means to vote?

There are several explanations, depending on whom you ask.

Nick Judd, managing editor of tech-politics site TechPresident, points out that ballots are supposed to be secret and untraceable back to the voter, and that if votes are sent by email, they'll create a record in the server that the provider — or even the government with a warrant — could access.

Another concern: Email is not dependable. Servers can fail. And with encryption and security measures varying among email providers, ensuring a secure transaction is tricky.

"The question is whether these risks outweigh the benefits," said University of Pennsylvania security researcher Matt Blaze. "

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY:

By Gary Puryear

“ARE YOU SURE?”

By this time we all know the outcome of the 2012 Presidential race. All the polls, political writers, and social media must now accept the facts. Go back with me a few years (in fact to the year of my birth). On the morning after the 1948 Presidential election the “Chicago Tribune’s” headline read “DEWEY DEFEATS TRUMAN”. This is certainly what the polls, many newspapers, political writers and many on both sides of the aisle expected. Oops! Harry S. Truman and not Thomas E Dewey won the election. There are many uncertainties in our world but we have one true guide as a source for living now and forever-the BIBLE. While many are more than willing to put their trust in so many uncertainties God has provided for us a trustworthy guide that doesn't hold out false hope nor make unreliable predictions. The Old Testament prophets predicted about 300 specific prophecies concerning the Christ with additional prophecies of many coming events. Some of the prophecies were made hundreds of years prior to their fulfillment. No doubt many were surprised at the outcome of the election but that's the world we live in. Let's put our hope and trust in the eternal promises of God who cannot lie (Hebrews 6:18; Titus 1:2). Regardless of who serves as our President let's keep Jesus as the King and Lord of our lives (1 Timothy 6:15). If we would spend more time reading and learning about God's promises we would be less stressed by the uncertainties of this world (John 10:10).

Fearing 'cliff,' investors finish brutal week

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Wall Street is peering over the “fiscal cliff” and feeling vertigo.

The stock market finished one of the worst weeks of the year Friday, pushing Washington to work out a deal to avoid the tax increases and government spending cuts set to take effect Jan. 1.

Remarks by re-elected President Barack Obama and House Speaker John Boehner on the looming deadline didn't do much to cheer the market. Stocks finished barely higher for the day.

Chris Bertelsen, the chief investment officer at Global Financial Private Capital of Sarasota, Fla., said he expects Congress and Obama to reach a compromise to avoid the fiscal cliff.

“But it could well be the conventional U.S. political way of doing it — the last minute type of stuff — in which case the markets will be haunted by it until the point it happens,” he said.

For the week, the Dow Jones industrial average fell 277 points, or 2.1 percent. The Dow has fallen 795 points since hitting its closing high for the year, 13,610 on Oct. 5.

The S&P fell 2.3 percent during the week, its worst weekly decline since June 1, when investor concern about the debt crisis in Europe was rising.

Stocks began their slide Wednesday in the biggest sell-off of the year after voters returned Obama, a Democratic Senate and a Republican House to power. Investors immediately turned to worrying about the cliff.

If the tax increases and spending cuts take full effect, the U.S. will likely fall back into recession, the Congressional Budget Office said Thursday.

Political ads push Scripps into black

CINCINNATI — The E.W. Scripps Co. returned to profitability in the third quarter, thanks to sharply higher political advertising revenue and contributions from TV stations it bought in 2011.

The newspaper publisher and TV station owner earned $12 million, or 21 cents per share, in the July-September quarter. In the same period last year, it lost $10.7 million, or 19 cents per share.

Revenue rose 31 percent to $219.6 million from $167.9 million a year ago, the company said Friday.

Scripps owns The Gleaner, The Evansville Courier & Press, The Union County Advocate and Audubon Printers, among other media properties.

The company's shares rose 42 cents per share or 4.1 percent to close at $10.59 on Friday. The stock has traded in a 52-week range of $7.52 and $11.46.

Chrysler to recall 919,000 Jeeps

DETROIT — Chrysler is recalling more than 919,000 older-model Jeep Grand Cherokee and Liberty SUVs worldwide because the air bags can inflate while people are driving them.

The recall affects Grand Cherokees from the 2002 through 2004 model years and Libertys from model years 2002 and 2003, according to documents posted Friday on the U.S. National Highway Traffic Safety Administration website.

The safety agency said that a part can fail in the air bag control computer, and the front and side air bags can inflate while the SUVs are being driven. An agency investigation started last year found that the air bags went off 215 times, causing 81 minor injuries.

Gasoline rationing latest aggravation from Sandy

By Tom Hayes and Jim Fitzgerald
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A gasoline shortage caused by Superstorm Sandy forced 1970s-era rationing on New Yorkers Friday, adding a fuel-gauge obsession to their frayed nerves and dwindling patience.

“I take passenger, I look at gas. I take another passenger, I look at gas,” said New York City taxi driver Shi Shir K. Roy. “Tension all the time.”

Though rationing that allowed private motorists to fill up only every other day seemed to help with gas lines, it didn’t answer motorists’ questions about why they had been waiting for days in hourslong lines to fuel up. The confusion led some, like Angel Ventura, to panic.

Ventura, who drives a delivery van for a camera rental company, has taken to hunting for gasoline every time his gauge drops below a quarter of a tank. “It makes me crazy, thinking I might hit empty and not be able to find it,” he said.

As drivers waited on police-monitored lines, thousands more in the region got their power back for the first time since Sandy came ashore 12 days ago. More than 420,000 customers were still without power in New Jersey and the New York City area. President Barack Obama, who visited the battered Jersey coast two days after the storm, said he would survey the damage in New York next week from the storm, which the American Red Cross said will create its largest U.S. relief effort since Hurricane Katrina in 2005.

A man carries two filled gas cans at a station in New York Friday. A new rationing plan lets motorists fill up every other day. Police were at gas stations to enforce the new system in New York City and on Long Island.

The gasoline rationing — first in the nation’s largest city since the 1970s Arab oil embargo — forced motorists to line up depending on whether their license plate ends with odd or even numbers.

Mayor Michael Bloomberg said one-third of the city’s gas stations were open Friday, compared to 25 percent the day before, and cautioned, “there’s no guarantee that odd-even is going to make a big difference.” His estimate was countered by the Energy Department, which said that more than 70 percent of the city’s stations have gas available for sales.

Industry officials first blamed the shortage on gas stations that lost power, but now say the problem has shifted to supply terminals, which are either shut or operating at reduced capacity. Drivers are also quicker to top off tanks because they’re afraid gasoline won’t be available, AAA spokesman Michael Green said.

Tom Kloza, chief oil analyst at the Oil Price Information Service, said the densely populated New York-New Jersey area has fewer stations per capita than any other major metropolitan area, making the shortage an even bigger problem. He said rationing earlier might have helped in New York City.

“It does curb some of the manic or panic behavior,” Kloza said.

Gasoline moves millions of New Yorkers, just as the subway does. Hundreds of thousands of people drive to work, especially from the outer boroughs, and taxis and delivery vans are part of every gridlocked intersection.

Friday was an “odd” day in the rationing plan, although not everyone had gotten with the program.

“Even? Odd? Whatever it is, I didn’t have the right one,” said Joe Standart, a 62-year-old artist whose even-numbered car was ordered off a West Side gas station line by a police officer.

Teniele Newbury, a mother of three, defended her need to use a car to go about her daily routine.

“People probably think we can take the subway,” she said, “but I’ve got three kids I’ve got to drop off at three different schools. You try that on the subway with three little kids.”

On Long Island, where odd-even rationing also began Friday, a spot check found shorter lines — 30 to 40 cars at most — and more stations with gas. In Brooklyn, car service owner Gary Lindenbaum said waits last week had been five or six hours.

“The rationing really helps us a lot,” said Lindenbaum, owner of Court Express. “We need to work. We need the gas.”

Lindenbaum drew the line at one hoarding technique: He posted a sign that said, “Drivers, do not carry full gas containers in your car.”

Some cab drivers have been doing just that. One taxi reeked of gasoline from the extra cans sloshing around in the back seat with a passenger.

Desperate drivers weren’t paying much attention to prices, but in New Jersey, seven gas stations were among the eight businesses sued by the state Friday on price-gouging claims.

CLIFF from 1A

sions on how to get there. The campaign is over, but another has just begun.

The White House quickly turned Obama’s comments into an appeal for public support, shipping around a video by email and telling Americans that “this debate can either stay trapped in Washington or you can make sure your friends and neighbors participate.”

Obama invited the top four leaders of Congress to the White House next week for talks, right before he departs on a trip to Asia.

In laying their negotiating markers, all sides sought to leave themselves wiggle room.

“I don’t want to box myself in. I don’t want to box anybody else in,” Boehner said at the Capitol.

Outside all the new the talk of openness, the same hard lines seemed in place.

Obama never expressly said that tax rates on top earners must return to the higher levels of the Bill Clinton era, leading to speculation that he was willing to soften the core position of his re-election campaign to get a grand debt deal with Republicans. “I’m not wedded to every detail of my plan. I’m open to compromise,” he said.

But his spokesman, Jay Carney, seemed to slam that door. He said Obama would veto any extension Congress might approve of tax cuts on incomes above $250,000.

Obama’s remarks were choreographed so that a diverse-looking group of Americans stood behind him and dozens more were invited to pack the East Room. In the weeks ahead, he plans to pull in the public as a way to pressure Congress.

“I am not going to ask students and seniors and middle class families to pay down the entire deficit while people like me, making over $250,000, aren’t asked to pay a dime more in taxes. I’m not going to do that,” said Obama.

He said voters plainly agreed with his approach that both tax hikes and spending cuts are needed to cut the debt.

“Our job now is to get a majority in Congress to reflect the will of the American people,” Obama said.

About 60 percent of voters said in exit polls Tuesday that taxes should increase, either for everyone or those making over $250,000. Left unsaid by Obama was that even more voters opposed raising taxes to help cut the deficit.

The scheduled year-end changes, widely characterized as a dangerous “fiscal cliff,” include a series of expiring tax cuts that were approved in the George W. Bush administration. The other half of the problem is a set of punitive across-the-board spending cuts, looming only because partisan panel of lawmakers failed to reach a debt deal.

Put together, they could mean the loss of roughly 3 million jobs.

Since the election, Boehner and Obama have both responded to the reality that they need each other.

Compromise has become mandatory if the two leaders are to avoid economic harm and the wrath of a public sick of government dysfunction.

Obama says he is willing to talk about changes to Medicare and Medicaid, earning him the ire of the left. Boehner says he will accept raising tax revenue and not just slashing spending, although he insists it must be done by reworking the tax code, not raising rates. The framework, at least, is there for a broad deal on taxes.

Yet the top Democrat and Republican in the nation are trying to put the squeeze on each other as the public waits for answers.

“This is his opportunity to lead,” Boehner said of Obama, not long before the president said: “All we need is action from the House.”

Obama said the uncertainty now spooking investors and employers will be shrunk if Congress extends — quickly — the tax cuts for all those except the most-well off.

The Senate has passed such a bill. The House showed no interest on Friday in Obama’s idea.

Obama and Republicans have tangled over the Bush tax cuts for years. The president gave in to Republican demands to extend the cuts across the board in 2010, but he ran for re-election on a pledge to allow the rates to increase on families making more than $250,000 a year.

Also lurking is the expiration of the nation’s debt limit in the coming weeks. The last fight on that nearly led the United States to default on its bills.

When asked if he would try to use that issue as leverage, Boehner said it must be addressed “sooner rather than later.”

The national debt now stands above $16 trillion. The government borrowed about 31 cents of every dollar it spent in 2012.

PETRAEUS from 1A

and asked to be allowed to resign. On Friday, the president accepted.

Petraeus told his staffers he was guilty of “extremely poor judgment” in the affair. “Such behavior is unacceptable, both as a husband and as the leader of an organization such as ours.”

He has been married for 38 years to Holly Petraeus, whom he met when he was a cadet at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. She was the daughter of the academy superintendent. They have two children, and their son led an infantry platoon in Afghanistan.

Obama said in a statement that the retired general had provided “extraordinary service to the United States for decades” and had given a lifetime of service that “made our country safer and stronger.” Obama called him “one of the outstanding general officers of his generation.”

The president said that CIA Deputy Director Michael Morell would serve as acting director. Morell was the key CIA aide in the White House to President George W. Bush during the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks.

“I am completely confident that the CIA will continue to thrive and carry out its essential mission,” Obama said.

The resignation comes at a sensitive time. The administration and the CIA have struggled to defend security and intelligence lapses before the attack that killed the U.S. ambassador to Libya and three others. It was an issue during the presidential campaign that ended with Obama’s re-election Tuesday.

The CIA has come under intense scrutiny for providing the White House and other administration officials with talking points that led them to say the Benghazi attack was a result of a film protest, not a militant terror attack. It has become clear that the CIA was aware the attack was distinct from the film protests rolling across other parts of the Muslim world.

Morell rather than Petraeus now is expected to testify at closed congressional briefings next week on the Sept. 11 attacks on the consulate in Benghazi.

For the director of the CIA, being engaged in an extramarital affair is considered a serious breach of security and a counterintelligence threat. If a foreign government had learned of the affair, the reasoning goes, Petraeus or the person with whom he was involved could have been blackmailed or otherwise compromised. Military justice considers conduct such as an extramarital affair to be possible grounds for court martial.

Failure to resign also could create the perception for the rank-and-file that such behavior is acceptable.

At FBI headquarters, spokesman Paul Bresson declined to comment on the information that the affair had been discovered in the course of an investigation by the bureau.

Holly Petraeus is known for her work helping military families. She joined the new Consumer Financial Protection Bureau to set up an office dedicated to helping service members with financial issues.

Though Obama made no direct mention of Petraeus’ reason for resigning, he offered his thoughts and prayers to the general and his wife, saying that Holly Petraeus had “done so much to help military families through her own work. I wish them the very best at this difficult time.”

Petraeus, who became CIA director in September 2011, was known as a shrewd thinker and hard-charging competitor. His management style was recently lauded in a Newsweek article by Paula Broadwell, co-author of the biography, “All In: The Education of General David Petraeus.”

Other CIA directors have resigned under unflattering circumstances.

CIA Director Jim Woolsey left over the discovery of a KGB mole and director John Deutch left after the revelation that he had kept classified information on his home computer.

Before Obama brought Petraeus to the CIA, he was credited with salvaging the U.S. war in Iraq.

“His inspirational leadership and his genius were directly responsible - after years of failure - for the success of the surge in Iraq,” Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., said Friday.

President George W. Bush sent Petraeus to Iraq in February 2007, at the peak of sectarian violence, to turn things around as head of U.S. forces. He oversaw an influx of 30,000 U.S. troops and moved troops out of big bases so they could work more closely with Iraqi forces scattered throughout Baghdad.

Petraeus’ success was credited with paving the way for the eventual U.S. withdrawal.

Many factors built into the dreaded ‘fiscal cliff’

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The so-called “fiscal cliff” is an economy-rattling combination of expiring Bush- and Obama-era tax cuts and major across-the-board spending cuts to the Pentagon and domestic programs.

The cliff is the punishment for previous failures of a bitterly divided Congress and White House to deal with the government’s spiraling debt or overhaul its unwieldy tax code.

The Congressional Budget Office estimates that the austerity program would reduce the deficit by $503 billion through the end of next September — or approaching $700 billion for the entire calendar year.

CBO says millions of jobs could be lost.

The fiscal cliff includes:

- The expiration of Bush-era tax cuts on income, investments, married couples and families with children and inheritances. In addition, some 26 million additional face the alternative minimum tax next filing season, which would raise their taxes by an average of $3,700. Cost through September: $330 billion.

- A $55 billion, 9 percent cut in the defense budget next year and another $55 billion in cuts to domestic programs, including a 2 percent cut to Medicare providers.
- The expiration of unemployment benefits for the long-term jobless. Cost: $26 billion.
- A sharp cut in reimbursements for doctors participating in Medicare. Cost: $11 billion.
- The expiration of Obama’s temporary 2 percentage point cut in payroll taxes. Cost: $95 billion.
- A variety of smaller taxes cuts for both businesses and individuals collectively known as tax “extenders.” They include a tax credit for research and development and a deduction for sales taxes in states that don’t have an income tax. Cost: about $65 billion.

- A need to increase the government’s borrowing cap (the so-called debt limit) of $16.4 trillion. The government is expected to hit the cap late this year but the Treasury Department has the authority to juggle certain accounts to buy several more weeks of time so that Congress won’t have to act until early next year.

through an “environmental cost recovery” charge on their monthly bills.

The environmental surcharge is in addition to an increase in base electric rates that KU is seeking.

If approved by the PSC, KU estimates that the average monthly bill for residential customers would rise by $7.41 to $99.71, an increase of about 8 percent from the current monthly average bill of $92.30.

KU and LG&E say the base rate increases are anticipated installation and equipment costs for scrubbers that will reduce sulfur dioxide emissions at their Mill Creek power plant and less expensive fabric-filter baghouses used to reduce particulate and mercury emissions.

KU and LG&E also expect that the increased cost of operations and maintenance will be about 45 percent than earlier expected.

The increased environmental costs will be passed on to consumers needed to pay for upgrades to electric transmission and distribution systems; improvements at electric generating facilities; and the hiring of additional employees, particularly in its customer service operation. The companies also cited increased costs to comply with tighter federal cyber security standards.

The PSC has scheduled a formal hearing beginning Nov. 27 concerning the proposed rate increase.

creasing, but in these tough economic times, it’s nice to be able to pass along some savings to our customers,” Victor A. Staffieri, chairman, CEO and president of LG&E and KU Energy, said in a statement.

Most of the capital savings are from the companies called “efficient procurement practices” that resulted in lower-than-

Cols fall in heartbreaker

■ Henderson's season ends with 21-17 loss to Eastern

Two fourth-quarter interceptions helped Louisville Eastern end Henderson County's season 21-17 Friday in a second-round playoff showdown worthy of a pair of top 10 teams.

The fifth-ranked Eagles (10-2) turned Jacob Biller's interception of Hunter Comer with 8:43 to play into the go-ahead score by quarterback Cody Wolfe on an 11-yard run.

Eastern, which will visit Ballard in next week's region final, had to turn back two more scoring opportunities by the Colonels, who were ranked sixth in 6-A and end the season with a 9-3 record.

"That's the type of game you hate to see either team freaking lose," first-year Eastern coach Stephen Ruckman said. "The coach in me wants to win of course, but the human in me hates to see that team lose."

"Holy moly, what a game," he said. "I about had a heart attack."

Hitting the option for several big plays, the Colonels were in a virtual dead heat in total yardage with the Eagles, 346-344. The defense firmly grabbed the game's momentum with a goal-line stand late in the third quarter as Eastern tried to answer Henderson County's go-ahead score on the first series of the second half on Russell Fuchs' second touchdown of the game.

"Our kids fought their butts off," Henderson County coach Clay Clevenger said. "We got beat by a good football team. They have a couple of kids who are difference-makers especially (Aaron Nix) and (Shane Fields). (Fields) comes from all over the place to make tackles on plays that we've scored on against everybody else."

After Lane McHatton, Keileen Chappell and Cade Wilke led the charge to hold up Nix on fourth-and-goal from the 1, the Colonels threatened to put another score on the board. They moved the ball down to the 24 but back-to-back false start penalties forced them into a third-and-19 from the 34, which set up Biller's interception of Comer's pass.

"There were plenty of mistakes to go around," Clevenger said when questioned about the penalties. "I made my share. There were a couple of play calls that I wish I had over."

The Eagles' subsequent scoring drive was ignited by a 63-yard pass from Wolfe to Clint Singleton.

Henderson County mounted another scoring threat, moving the ball near midfield on a 8-yard pass on fourth-and-6 from Comer to Brennan Farley. Fields broke up a second-down pass and a third-down attempt was incomplete. With the season on the line on fourth-and-seven from the Colonel 49, Clevenger called a reverse pass by Jamal Hill, which was intercepted by Fields. That was one of the plays were Clevenger would like a do-over.

"That's a play that looks good on paper, and it's looked good when we've practiced it," he said.

Henderson County's Kobe Carter stretches but can't reach a pass over his head during the Colonels' playoff game against Louisville Eastern on Friday night.

The defense did give the Colonels another shot at the end zone, but they ran out of time after Comer's second-down pass from the 32 was incomplete.

"That's the best football team we've played this year, especially physically," Ruckman said. "Our guys were slowing down there at the end, and they just kept coming."

Tre Harrison scored to start and end the first half for Eastern. The Eagles needed three fourth-down conversions to finish both scoring drives. Wolfe converted a fourth-and-1 from the Colonel 37 with a sneak, and Harrison scored from 21 yards out on the game's opening drive.

Trailing 10-7, Eastern used nearly all of the final 6:05 of the half with an 80-yard drive. Running back Ryan Watkins plowed forward for a yard on fourth-and-one from the Eagle 44, then Harrison made a diving catch on fourth-and-4 from the Colonel 49 to keep the drive going. A 30-yard gain, the longest play of the half, by Watkins set up a 4-yard touchdown run by Harrison with 18 seconds to go in the half.

Nick Gregory kicked a 32-yard field goal on Henderson County's opening drive. On their next possession, the Colonels fumbled the ball away on the Eastern 14. But the Eagles returned the miscue when they touched James Bickers' punt and Henderson's Michael Staples recovered the ball at the 34. Henderson County took advantage with Fuchs ending the scoring drive with a 5-yard run to take a 10-7 lead with 6:05 to go in the half.

Fuchs, who had a team-high 91 yards rushing on 10 carries, scored his second touchdown on a 20-yard run to start the second half. Chappell rushed for 82 yards on 22 carries, while Comer had 80 yards on 14 carries.

Comer completed 4-of-14 pass attempts for 69 yards.

Watkins led Eastern in rushing with 94 yards on 16 carries. Wolfe completed 8-of-18 passes for 178 yards and rushed for 31 yards on 14 carries.

Ballard, which beat Eastern 42-21 on Oct. 4, advanced with a 30-14 win over Oldham County.

Wildcats hang on for victory

■ Polson helps Kentucky hold off Maryland 72-69

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Junior guard Jarrod Polson scored 10 points — three more than he had in his career at Kentucky — and made the clinching free throws with 7.7 seconds to play as the third-ranked Wildcats held off a furious second-half rally by Maryland for a 72-69 victory Friday night.

Kyle Wiltjer, a sophomore, led Kentucky with 19 points in the second game of the Barclays Center Classic, the first college basketball games played in the new arena in Brooklyn. Archie Goodwin, the only one of the four freshmen in Kentucky's heralded recruiting class to score in double figures, had 16 points for the defending national champions.

Seven-foot-1 sophomore Alex Len led Maryland with 23 points and 12 rebounds, both career highs. His rare three-point play — he made the first free throw then rebounded his own miss of the second — brought the Terrapins within 70-69 with 8.9 seconds left.

Polson was fouled with 7.7 seconds left and made two free throws for a 72-69 lead.

Maryland's Pe'Shon Howard missed the final shot but it was only a 2-point attempt.

Before the game, Calipari presented a check for $1 million to the American Red Cross to help victims of Superstorm Sandy. The money was raised in telethons in Kentucky set up by Calipari and was to help those from Brooklyn, a New York City borough which received extensive damage from the storm.

Almost all the attention coming into the game was about Kentucky's recruiting class, one which the fans there hoped would lead them to a national championship as last season's freshman class did. But the Wildcats had six players drafted, including Anthony Davis and Michael Kidd-Gilchrist, who were taken No. 1 and 2 overall.

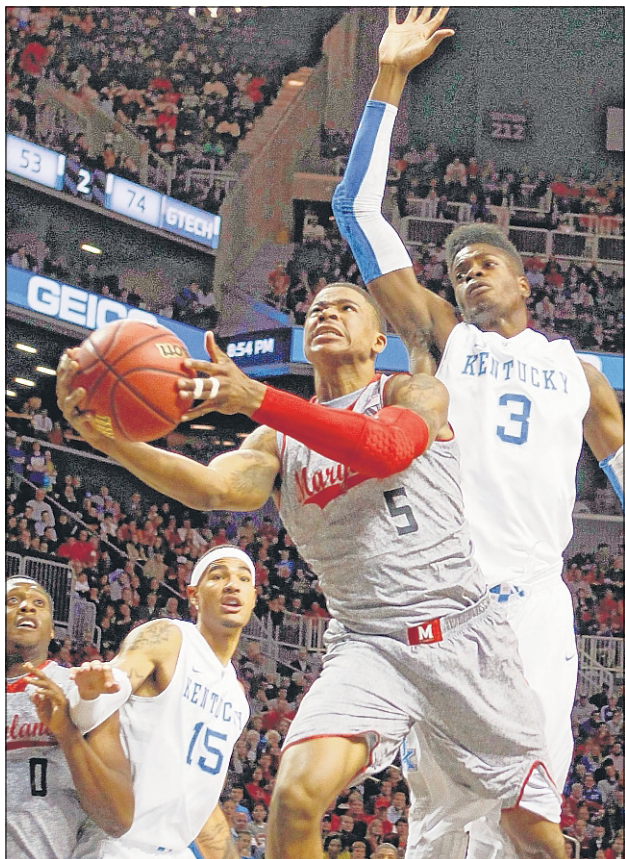

This class still has talent but they looked like freshmen, especially coming down the stretch when the veterans — Wiltjer and Polson — made the key plays to keep Maryland from taking the lead over the final 5 minutes.

Maryland had a terrible shooting first half, finishing 13 of 44 (29.5 percent) — including missing all 11 3-point attempts. Kentucky, on the other hand, was having a great half from the floor. The Wildcats made 18 of 31 from the field (58.1 percent) and they were 5 of 7 from beyond the arc in taking a 49-36 lead.

With most of the sellout crowd of 17,732 on the side of the Terrapins, the shooting turned for both teams.

Suddenly Maryland was hitting shots, even three 3-pointers, and it crashed the boards relentlessly. The Terrapins outrebounded Kentucky 54-38, including a 28-13 advantage on the offensive end.

Alex Poythress and Willie Cauley-Stein both had eight points for Kentucky, while the other freshman, Nerlens Noel, had four.

Cards still seeking respect

■ Unbeaten Louisville will face Syracuse with chip on shoulders

By John Kekis

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Charlie Strong wants his Louisville Cardinals to enter the Carrier Dome with a big chip on their shoulders when they play Syracuse. “I want our players to feel like they are being disrespected,” Strong said. Shouldn’t be a problem. Despite being one of only six unbeaten teams in the Football Bowl Subdivision, Louisville (9-0, 4-0 Big East) is ranked 11th in the AP Top 25 and ninth in the latest BCS standings. In the BCS, the Cardinals trail Georgia and Florida, who each have one loss, and LSU and South Carolina, with two losses apiece. “What I would hate to see is all of a sudden we’re No. 5 in the BCS,” Strong said. “Then our guys are going to feel like, ‘Hey, we have arrived. We’re there.’ No. Let’s just keep working and then at the end see where we are.” The Cardinals have quietly made a strong statement behind quarterback Teddy Bridgewater and will present all sorts of problems for the Orange (4-5, 3-2). “This is the best football team that we will have played so far,” said Syracuse coach Doug Marrone, who watched his team lose 42-29 to Matt Barkley and then-No. 2 Southern California in the second week of the season. “Even with a tough out-of-conference schedule, I would say Teddy Bridgewater is the best quarterback that we will face so far this season. He’s a playmaker.” Indeed. Coming off a five-touchdown performance in a 45-17 win over Temple, Bridgewater has thrown for 2,434 yards and 18 TDs with only four interceptions, has a 70.4-percent completion rate, and is ranked fifth nationally in passing efficiency (169.98). “He’s a good quarterback on film,” Syracuse nose tackle Jay Bromley said. “He delivers the ball on time. He extends plays with his feet. But we’ve faced some really good quarterbacks over the course of the season, so we’re prepared for anything. We can turn this around.”

Syracuse has to win two of its final three games to achieve the six wins needed to play in a bowl game, and the Orange will rely on quarterback Ryan Nassib to lead the way. He has thrown for a school-record 2,773 yards as the Orange has produced three 500-yard receivers in a season for the first time — Marcus Sales with 722, Alec Lemon 569, and Jarrod West 523. “It’s going to be a good test for us, a team that needs to become bowl-eligible,” Strong said. “Now, they have to go win.” Syracuse has excelled against the run under defensive coordinator Scott Shafer. But in a 35-24 loss last week at Cincinnati, it faltered despite a solid effort by safety Shamarko Thomas, who had 14 tackles (10 solos) and forced a fumble. Cincinnati’s George Winn was named Big East offensive player of the week on Monday. He rushed for 165 yards and three touchdowns — both career highs — and threw a 37-yard touchdown pass to key the win over Syracuse. That came a week after South Florida rushed for 369 yards — a high against a Shafer defense in his 45 games at Syracuse — in a one-point loss to the Orange. Now come Louisville’s Senorise Perry and Jeremy Wright. Although Bridgewater is the guy who makes the Louisville offense purr, Perry has a league-high 11 touchdown runs, Wright has nine, and the two have combined to average 151 yards rushing per game. Though the hopes of making the postseason for the second time in three years are in jeopardy with two road games remaining, Marrone isn’t looking any farther ahead than Saturday. “I always look at it from week to week,” he said. “I’ve never really looked at it from the overall picture because you can’t. I think it distracts you from the task at hand.” The Syracuse players certainly seem focused, especially because Saturday will be Senior Day for a core group of players that have been key to helping Marrone turn around a program that was a laughingstock not so long ago. “It’s special for me,” Nassib said. “It’s my last game in the dome. I’ve been in there for the last five years. I would say there’s a little more extra emphasis on being a little bit more prepared, more ready to go. But at the same time I’ve got to make sure I don’t try to do too much.”

Colts lucking out with star’s health

■ Playoffs are possible if he stays on field

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indianapolis Colts are concerned about the hits rookie quarterback Andrew Luck has been taken, calling some of them cheap shots. One day after the Colts won their second straight road game, 27-10 at Jacksonville, interim coach Bruce Arians described some of the hits that way and urged his quarterback to protect himself. Arians also asked for officials to keep a watchful eye on his star QB. “I can’t say they are purposefully (hitting Luck), but there sure are a lot of them happening,” Arians said when asked to elaborate on the shots on Luck. “You put yourself in harm’s way out there. He’s done a good job of sliding and hopefully the referees will do a good job of protecting him when he does slide.” Luck has done just about everything Indianapolis asked this season. He’s won six games, accounted for 13 touchdowns, reduced his rate of interceptions and is on pace for a record-breaking season. He’ll need to do one more thing to keep the surprising Colts in the playoff hunt: stay healthy. Luck has been able to slip tackles and slither his way through oncoming pass rushers all season. He’s already run for 159 yards, ranking among the league’s top rushing quarterbacks. His two scoring runs Thursday gave him five this season, breaking the franchise record set by Bert Jones and matched twice by Peyton Manning. Add that to his passing totals — 208 completions in 362 attempts for 2,631 yards with 10 touchdowns and nine interceptions — and it’s easy to understand why Luck has the whole league debating whether Indianapolis can make an astounding run into the playoffs. Losing Luck would change everything. He spent much of Thursday night’s game under duress and twice gained 15 yards after the Jags (1-8) were called for illegal hits. One interception was erased in the second quarter when Jacksonville defensive end Andre Branch hit Luck helmet to helmet. The two-time Heisman Trophy runner-up took advantage of the second chance by leading the Colts to their first touchdown of the night — a 5-yard TD run on a bootleg that was intended to be a pass. Luck scored again when he powered in from 1 yard on fourth-and-goal, a play on which he nearly lost control of the ball. Jags coach Mike Mularkey lost control of his temper, drawing a 15-yard penalty for unsportsmanlike conduct. But the play that really bothered Arians came in the fourth quarter when Dawan Landry hit the sliding Luck high after a 9-yard run for a first down. It appeared Landry also hit Luck in the head, though the replay seemed to show Luck was hit in the right shoulder. After a timeout, Luck and Landry shook hands. “It was a little bootleg play with four guys flooding the zones. He kept the ball up, kept the ball up and as big and strong as he is, once he got the 1-yard line, he was going to score,” Arians said when asked about the first TD run. “Same with the late one where he got cheap-shotted.”

Colts players are off until Monday and were not available for comment. Protecting gifted running quarterbacks has long been a concern in the NFL. Eagles coach Andy Reid has suggested the last two years that officials allowed his quarterback, Michael Vick, to take more dangerous hits — hits that could have drawn penalties with less mobile quarterbacks. The Colts, of course, would put Luck under armed guard on the football field if they could. Instead, all Arians really can do is urge Luck to slide more often and avoid putting himself in more danger by making tackles. After throwing an interception late in the first half, when his arm was hit, the disgusted quarterback sprinted up the field and threw his shoulder into the lower body of Landry, who lateraled the ball to Chris Prosinski. Arians tapped Luck on the helmet when he got to the sideline. On Friday, the rookie got advice from all corners. ESPN analyst Bill Polian, the former Colts vice chairman, said he wouldn’t want his quarterback making those kinds of tackles. Former Colts backup Jim Sorgi told a local radio station he probably would have done the same thing, though having quarterbacks backing up 10 to 15 yards and only making tackles on a touchdown-saving play wasn’t not unusual in the NFL.

Toppers are again fighting for a bowl bid

The Associated Press

BOWLING GREEN — Western Kentucky has been in this position before. The Hilltoppers went 7-5 last season but were the lone eligible Football Bowl Subdivision team without a bid. They seemed destined for bowl selection this season after starting 5-1. Western Kentucky has lost two of three since and is in danger of missing the postseason for the second straight year. The Hilltoppers (6-3, 3-2 Sun Belt Conference) are now on a mission to win their final three games, starting with Saturday’s contest against Florida Atlantic (2-7, 1-4). WKU might still find itself excluded from the two bowl games with conference ties — the New Orleans and GoDaddy.com bowls. Tied with Louisiana-Lafayette (5-3, 3-2) for fourth place in the league, the Hilltoppers will need to win in dominating fashion to remain in consideration. “We’re in the same predicament this year,” Hilltoppers running back Antonio Andrews said. Last year “we didn’t get a bowl so now we’re trying to get these three wins.” WKU can help its cause by winning at Louisiana-Lafayette next weekend. But both schools lag behind a three-way logjam atop the league between Arkansas State, Middle Tennessee and Arkansas State — all of whom are 6-3 overall and 4-1 in the Sun Belt. The Hilltoppers have one tiebreaker in their favor, a 26-13 victory over Arkansas State in September. But they’ve lost to Middle Tennessee and Louisiana-Monroe, putting WKU in the position of needing to win out while those teams would have to lose twice. Western Kentucky defensive tackle Jamarcus Allen said the team knows it faces an uphill climb if it’s to finish among the top two in the league. “It (stinks) that our destiny is held in other teams’ hands right now, what we set forth in our goals,” he said. “We can’t control it. The only thing we can control is our next game.” Saturday’s meeting with Florida Atlantic follows a long weekend for Western Kentucky. The Hilltoppers lost 34-29 to Middle Tennessee on Nov. 1. Coach Willie Taggart said the two extra days allowed his team to do some emotional regrouping. “Just watching (the Middle Tennessee game) I felt like we were an emotionally spent football team,” he said. Taggart added that his team’s emotional drainage resulted from this season’s heightened expectations, ratcheted up after the Hilltoppers’ fast start including road wins at Kentucky, Arkansas State and Troy. To relieve the stress, WKU went over to the Hilltoppers’ baseball stadium for an impromptu home run derby. “I wanted our guys to get back to having fun and get away from pressing,” Taggart said.

Hoosiers are ready for today’s big showdown vs. Badgers

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana is suddenly playing meaningful late-season games. The Hoosiers head into Saturday’s home game against Wisconsin with, wait for it, title hopes and bowl possibilities on the table. School officials are expecting a big crowd, too, maybe the biggest all season. The crash-course lesson for the Hoosiers in how to deal with their biggest game in five years? Change nothing. “These guys have stayed very focused on the practice field and when game time rolls around, they’ll go out and compete,” offensive coordinator Seth Littrell said. Clearly, the Hoosiers (4-5, 2-3 Big Ten) have more fight in them this season. Four of the five losses have come by a combined

10 points. They gave undefeated Ohio State one of its biggest scares of the season, and the Hoosiers have rebounded from an 11-game Big Ten losing streak to win their last two — their first time two-game league winning streak since 2007. It has put Indiana in position to accomplish things many thought would be impossible less than a month ago. A win over Wisconsin (6-3, 3-2) would:

- Give Indiana its first three-game Big Ten winning streak since a four-game streak in October 1993.
 - Move the Hoosiers to within a victory of becoming bowl eligible.
 - Hand the Hoosiers the inside track to representing the Leaders Division in next month’s Big Ten title game.
- Ready or not, here come the Hoosiers. “We worry about what we do. We’re a long way from being a good football team but we’re getting better every day,” said coach Kevin Wilson, who had lots of experience in big games when he was the offensive coordinator at Oklahoma. “Kids have bought into it. We’re getting better every day and it’s fun.” There’s plenty at stake for the Badgers this weekend, too. Because the top two Leaders Division teams, Ohio State and Penn State, are ineligible to play in the league title game, Wisconsin can clinch its second straight spot in the league title game this weekend. Perhaps no other Big Ten team has played more big games than Wisconsin recently. A win Saturday would put the Badgers within one championship game of reaching their third consecutive Rose Bowl.

Advice

Stronger marriage could help save addicted son

Dear Amy: Many times you have advised engaged couples who are facing possible deal-breaking issues (usually involving other family members) that unless they are both prepared to put their marriage at the center of their lives, they should not tie the knot.

How about married couples who are faced with issues later during their marriage?

I am 66 and 12 years into my second marriage. The past six years have revolved around my 25-year-old stepson's heroin addiction, related felony convictions, sex-offender conviction, prison sentences and parole violations.

My wife has centered our life on her son and in my opinion is his greatest enabler, with no signs of change in the future.

I love this woman and want to spend the rest of my life with her. Before marrying, I agreed that she and her son were “a package deal.” That was when he was a child (his father had died). Who could have seen this coming?

However, I am done with the daily drama. I feel he is long overdue to take responsibility for his choices and actions. I want to feel our marriage is at the center of our lives. I have not felt this in six years. I feel I'm being selfish in wanting my life back.

We have been to numerous counselors only to end the sessions at the slightest hint that the marriage should be of prime importance. We've talked of divorce, and I guess that's where we are heading.

Do you have any wisdom?

— Sad Stepdad

Dear Sad: Let me re-frame this for you: In the spirit of the “package deal,” think of this as an effort to save your stepson's life.

Your wife's behavior so far has contributed to his worsening situation. Unless she is willing to see things differently and change her behavior, her son will continue to spiral downward.

If he is a heroin addict and she is giving him money, for instance, she might as well put a needle in his arm.

One reason to place your marriage at the center of your lives is because it will give your family the strength to cope with this extreme challenge. If you two can agree on a basic course of action, your relationship will survive.

A strong marriage will ultimately help your stepson. For inspiration, read “Don't Let Your Kids Kill You: A Guide for Parents of Drug and Alcohol Addicted Children,” by Charles Rubin (2007, New Century).

Meet with a therapist qualified to counsel families of addicts. If your wife is unable to acknowledge the need for change to save her son, then I agree that sadly your marriage probably will not survive.

Dear Amy: “Grumpy Old Man” wrote to you about his extreme frustration with the presence of neighbor kids in his yard retrieving their baseballs.

Your answer could have included a couple other considerations: Kids grow up quickly; these teenagers will soon move past playing baseball in the backyard.

Grumpy will continue to be neighbors with the parents long after the teenagers have moved out.

If Grumpy decides to confront them, he may alleviate a temporary nuisance and replace it with permanent bad feelings between him and his neighbors. Grumpy may even find that he will miss the kids later.

Another option might be to approach the teenagers and ask them to help with a little lawn work in return for using his backyard.

The teenagers might choose for themselves not to use Grumpy's backyard. Better yet, Grumpy gets help raking the leaves.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You'll believe in others and encourage them to believe in themselves. This is far better than watching them relax while you shoulder the bulk of the work.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You're not a people user; you want to be a part of relationships in which there are reciprocal benefits. You have an excellent instinct for picking whom you should know out of a crowd.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 20). You'll be approached by someone who communicates differently because of where he's coming from, or because he has simply lost touch with the way people normally communicate. Your compassion will be needed.

It's not hard, costly to make your own home air fresheners

Dear Readers: Many folks buy the commercial air fresheners, but they can be pricey. To save money, here is an easy Heloise Hints way that you can make air fresheners at home for just a few cents.

All you need is some essential oil (you can use whichever you like, such as peppermint, lavender, orange, lemon, eucalyptus and bergamot). These essential oils can be found at many large grocery chains or drugstores. They may seem to cost a bit, but a small bottle will last a long, long time.

All you do is put several drops of the oil on some cotton balls. Then put the cotton balls in a glass, ceramic or metal container.

Set these around the room you want to freshen, and the fragrance will be wonderful. They must be placed high enough and out of the way so that children or pets cannot get to them.

— Heloise

P.S.: My favorites are essential oil of lavender, which is calming and relaxing, and essential oil of orange, which can be uplifting and invigorating, and adds a fresh citrus fragrance to the room.

Dear Readers: Gloria B. in Waterville, Maine, sent a close-up photo of her adorable Yorkie, Mekka. Gloria says: “My husband rescued her for me when I retired. She is now 7 years old.” To see Mekka's close up, please visit my website at www.Heloise.com and click on “Pets.”

— Heloise

Dear Heloise: I discovered an economical way to clean the carpeted steps in your home, especially if you have pets.

Start by sweeping from the top with a broom to get most of the hair, all the way to the bottom. You won't believe how much hair you will scoop up. It's economical, because now you won't have to run your vacuum so long, and there will be fewer bags or canisters to empty!

— Helen F., Steubenville, Ohio

Dear Helen: You are right — sometimes an “old-fashioned method” is surprisingly more efficient than using an appliance that uses electricity.

— Heloise

Dear Heloise: I was losing a lot of pins and needles from my portable sewing kit. I had one of the old-fashioned “tomato”-style pincushions, which was starting to wear out and leak sawdust into the bottom of my kit, so I finally decided to replace it.

After removing all the pins and needles, I decided to rip it open on the chance that there were more inside. Were there ever! Inside, I found 13 needles and 30 pins! Never throw away a sawdust-filled pincushion without emptying it first. You never know what you'll find.

— Elsie in Huntsville, Ala.

Dear Heloise: It is difficult to cut thin plastic sheeting with scissors because it tends to slip between scissor blades instead of cutting. What works much better is an envelope opener with a sharp blade insert.

Yes, you should heed expiration date on vitamins

Dear Drs. Donohue and Roach: Please settle an argument. My husband says vitamins and supplements do not expire. He has pills from 1996. He says it's the manufacturer's way of making you toss them and buy more. I say they lose their effect and are a placebo or possibly harmful. Some insight would be helpful. — W.T.T.

until expiration, certainly one year after expiration is too long. Sixteen years after expiration, I would think that “dangerous” would not be too strong a term.

Dear Drs. Donohue and

Roach: A while ago, I read an article you wrote on weightlifting intervals. It dealt with minutes between sets. However, I have this question: Is it OK to do the same set of exercises twice a day? For instance, morning and evening? Also, how much time should I allow between finishing my evening exercises and bedtime? — D.R.

Dear D.R.: Because muscles need time to heal and grow after an intense workout, multiple sets of exercises of the same group at different times of the same day generally is not encouraged.

However, many athletes will work one muscle group in the morning and another muscle group in the evening. That said, everybody is different, and it's OK to experiment to see what works best for you. But consider why you are lifting weights.

If it's to get big muscles, then very intense workouts with longer rest (even two days) tends to be more effective. If it's for your overall health, it doesn't really matter; all weightlifting is beneficial for your health. If it's to improve stamina, then more frequent sets might be of more benefit. As far as exercise and bedtime, I'd recommend at least an hour between the two. Most people actually gain energy from their exercise regimen, so you might have a tough time getting to sleep right after evening exercise.

Seek guidance from God when planning your holiday

Dear Dr. Graham: I know Christmas is still a long way off, but I’m already dreading it. I know I shouldn’t feel this way, but Christmas is always such a hassle that I just can’t help it. Is it wrong to feel this way about Jesus’ birthday?

— Mrs. R.C.

Dear Mrs. R.C.: I suspect almost everyone reading this can identify with you — because for many of us Christmas has become a burden instead of a blessing. We get so busy, and we become so overwhelmed with everything we need to do, that we lose sight of its true meaning.

But of course it shouldn’t be this way, because at Christmas we celebrate the greatest event in human history — the coming of Jesus Christ into the world.

Why did Christ come? He came for one reason: To provide the way for us to be forgiven of our sins and go to heaven when we die. He did this because God loves us and wants us to experience the joy of His presence every day.

As you look toward Christmas, begin by committing these days — and your whole life — to Jesus Christ. Take time each day to read His Word and reflect on His love.

Then ask God to help you plan your holiday time carefully (even cutting out things that don’t matter), instead of leaving everything to the last minute.

Stolen cross turns up two years later

The Associated Press

HALF MOON BAY, Calif. — Authorities say a controversial cross honoring war dead that was stolen from its Mojave Desert perch two years ago has turned up hundreds of miles away in the San Francisco Bay area.

The San Mateo County Sheriff’s Department was notified this week that a large cross was tied to a fence in Half Moon Bay.

KGO-TV reports that the National Park Service confirmed it’s the same cross that vanished from Sunrise Rock in the Mojave Desert.

The cross honoring war dead was taken in 2010 after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled it didn’t violate separation of church and state because the public land it stood on was being transferred to a veterans group.

A replacement will be dedicated there on Sunday for Veterans Day.

Brazil's 'pop-star priest' gets mammoth new stage

■ Catholic officials hoping to renew interest in church

By Bradley Brooks
Associated Press

SAO PAULO — Brazil's "pop-star priest" is already packing in the crowds at the newly opened mammoth sanctuary that he built for his campaign to stem the exodus of faithful from the Roman Catholic Church in Latin America's biggest nation.

Brazil still has more Catholics than any other country in the world, with about 65 percent of its 192 million people identifying themselves that way in the 2010 census. But that is down from 74 percent in 2000 and is the lowest since records began tracking religion 140 years ago.

That's where Father Marcelo Rossi's Mother of God sanctuary comes in. The not-yet-finished structure will seat 6,000 people and have standing room for 14,000 more, church leaders say. In addition, the grounds outside can hold 80,000 people who could watch Mass on outdoor video screens.

After the inaugural Mass on Nov. 2 attracted upward of 50,000 people, a beaming Rossi told reporters: "They couldn't all fit in. There was a crowd that had to stand outside! That's a sign we're on the right path, and it's this sanctuary."

Similar numbers jammed into the huge church Nov. 3.

It's a fitting stage for Rossi, a Latin Grammy-nominated singer who is known for tossing buckets of holy water on worshippers and performing rollicking Christian songs backed by a blasting live band during Mass.

The church sits on 323,000 square feet of land. Church officials declined to confirm how big the actual building is, though local reports put it at 91,500 square feet. That would make it one of the world's 10 biggest churches. A cross soaring 138 feet into the air is the focal point.

The Mother of God sanctuary is anything but traditional. Designed by noted Brazilian architect Ruy Ohtake, it has a wide-open layout giving it the feel of a warehouse. Concrete walls hold up a sloping blue roof that from the outside looks more like a basketball arena than a house of worship.

With the church several years away from completion, white plastic chairs were in the place of pews for a lucky few thousand to grab a seat. The rest had to stand.

Rossi dismisses the idea his huge church is a response to the explosion of the evangelical Christian faith in Brazil. Rather, the priest seems to be battling what recent studies indicate is Catholicism's biggest enemy: indifference.

While millions of Brazilian Catholics joined Pentecostal congregations in the 1990s, a study conducted last year by Brazil's Getulio Vargas Foundation based on census data found that the Catholics leaving the church these days are mostly becoming nonreligious.

Experts have said the trend of Brazilians deciding organized religion isn't for them poses a more potent threat to Catholic leaders than losses to the Pentecostals.

Rossi chose to open his new church on the Brazilian holiday of Finados, the nation's version of the Day of the Dead. "A day, a day that was dead, was transformed!" the priest told worshippers during the service, using his gold-plated microphone.

The "pop-star priest" is seen by Brazilian Catholicism as its biggest weapon against the lack of interest, and his new sanctuary adds to his tools of best-selling books and music recordings to keep worshippers interested in what many complain has become a staid institution.

There was nothing stale about his inaugural Mass.

Singing as loud as they could, waving white hankies and swaying with a rocking band, the 20,000 people who jammed into the Mother of God sanctuary hammed it up for TV cameras and shed tears down their cheeks as their superstar priest waved to them from the pulpit.

An estimated 30,000 other people had gathered outside, where young boys climbed up into nearby trees trying to get a glimpse of the church grounds as they squinted over a sea of heads streaming out of the sanctuary.

Church celebrating 190th anniversary

By Rachel E. Sheeley
Palladium-Item

EAST GERMANTOWN, Ind. — Just six years after Indiana achieved statehood, Zion's Lutheran Church was founded in 1822 in East Germantown, which also is known as Pershing.

This past Sunday, the congregation celebrated its 190th anniversary with special services, a program and a cake. Bishop Bill Gatkjen of the Indiana-Kentucky Synod spoke during the morning worship service.

An afternoon program included comments by former pastors, the showing of a DVD of interviews with long-time members, a hymn sing and a display of memorabilia, including the signature quilt made by church women to raise money in the late 1800s.

Pianist Jean Johnston performed special music on the grand piano because reconstruction of the historic pipe organ has been delayed.

The pipe organ was purchased in the early 1930s for Zion's from St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Richmond.

The Palladium-Item reports that Zion's is Indiana's oldest Evangelical Lutheran Church in America congregation.

The church's first home was a log building, followed in 1833 by a brick structure. That brick church was demolished to build the present brick structure of Gothic design in 1900. A series of photos of the current building's construction hang in the church hallway.

In preparation for the anniversary, congregation member Phyllis Mattheis has been organizing and writing historic information about the church and its membership.

Five photo albums have been assembled of the people who have made a difference in the life of Zion's, Mattheis said. Dorothy Bertsch Smith assembled the scattered pieces of information and photos into most of the albums.

Dorothy Bertsch also hand-wrote the 750 names from the 1890 Signature Quilt, which were then typed by Clara Sowers into a "key" list, Mattheis said. The quilt was among the memorabilia displayed Sunday.

Mattheis said that in reviewing another archival file, she was surprised to learn that the church's 110th anniversary celebration included a full week of activities in 1932. The celebration included a pageant called "The Search for Light" in which 50 members of the congregation appeared.

"The pageant was so well-received that a second performance was presented the following Sunday. This was in the days when church and school were the social life of small towns," Mattheis said.

During the 1932 celebration, Mattheis said, "Each person signed their name in the book and a total of 329 names are recorded. Most folks were from this area, but there are also addresses from New Castle, Hagerstown, Richmond, Connersville, Indianapolis, Straughn, New Salem, Muncie, many from Anderson, and one from Hamilton, Ohio."

Something similar was done for the 125th anniversary celebration Oct. 5, 1949, and more than 200 signatures were collected. Signatures also were collected on other special occasions, Mattheis said.

"Thanks must go to the people who left this record for us today," she said.

Investor allegedly took $400,000 from church

The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — An investor has been charged with defrauding an Indianapolis church of nearly $400,000 that it gave him as it tried to raise more money to rebuild after a fire.

Arman Gasparian, the owner of Indianapolis-based GMA Capital, told leaders of Bell's Chapel Church he would use $365,000 as earnest money to obtain a $3 million private grant toward replacing the church building destroyed in a 2008 fire, according to court documents.

The counts of mail fraud and wire fraud allege that Gasparian put the money into his own bank accounts, took double the $35,000 fee he disclosed to church officials and paid much of the remainder of the money to associates.

Gasparian made an initial appearance this week in federal court on the charges. Defense attorney Mike Donahoe declined to comment to The Associated Press.

The Rev. Adrienne Holmes, the church's pastor, said the congregation on the city's east side still needed the money that came from its $1.3 insurance settlement to finish rebuilding work.

"THE SOUL OF CHRISTIANITY"

"And you must love the LORD your God with all your heart, all your soul, all your mind, and all your strength."

Mark 12:30 NLT

We know what it means to love the Lord with our heart, mind and strength, but what does loving God with our soul look like?

To love God with our soul means that we step back and allow ourselves to be awestruck once again with God, His Word, and His presence. However, if we were honest with ourselves we would admit that these experiences have ceased to produce wonder in our lives.

What would happen if our encounters with God started to produce wonder once again? What would happen if we read our Bibles with a sense that the living words of God are speaking today? I believe the result would be a Christian life that attracts others; A Christian life that is bound by an inescapable love for the Creator.

My wife and I hope to nurture this kind of Christianity within our daughter. Madelynn is three years old and we read the Bible to her on a regular basis. It is the introduction to her Bible that I want to share with you, because I believe it captures what Scripture is all about.

Now some people think the Bible is a book of rules, telling you what you should and shouldn't do. The Bible certainly does have some rules in it. They show you how life works best. But the Bible isn't mainly about you and what you should be doing. It's about God and what he has done. Other people think the Bible is a book of heroes, showing you people you should copy. The Bible does have some heroes in it, but most of the people in the Bible aren't heroes at all. The Bible is most of all a Story. It's an adventure story about a young hero who comes from a far country to win back his lost treasure. It's a love story about a brave Prince who leaves his palace, his throne—everything—to rescue the one he loves. It's like the most wonderful of fairy tales that has come true in real life! You see, the best thing about this Story is—it's true. There are lots of stories in the Bible, but all the stories are telling one Big Story. The Story of how God loves his children and comes to rescue them. At the center of the Story, there is a baby. He is like the missing piece in a puzzle—the piece that makes all the other pieces fit together, and suddenly you can see a beautiful picture.

These words by Sally Lloyd-Jones capture what it is like when we read Scripture with wonder and amazement again. What if the rest of our Christian life was like this? Did you ever wonder what your Christian life could be like?

JFK Tribute unveiled in Fort Worth

By Angela K. Brown
Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas — On a rainy November morning in 1963, Pauline Gasca Valenciano stood in a crowd of thousands on a downtown street waiting to hear President John F. Kennedy speak, and afterward she touched his hand — hours before his assassination.

This week, she stood among hundreds as an 8-foot-tall bronze statue of Kennedy, part of the JFK Tribute, was unveiled near the site where he spoke outside a hotel before he addressed a Chamber of Commerce breakfast on Nov. 22, 1963. Those turned out to be his final public speeches. He was fatally shot several hours later while riding in a motorcade in Dallas.

The JFK Tribute includes a granite wall containing his quotes from that morning and pictures of the late president and his wife. Visitors also can go on an audio tour and download transcripts of the two speeches on their mobile devices.

The exhibit was created to honor the ideals and themes in Kennedy's last speeches — his vision for the country's prosperity, his respect for the military and his goals of space exploration — because they are relevant today, said Andy Taft, president of Downtown Fort Worth Initiatives, a nonprofit organization that spearheaded the project.

The JFK Tribute also aims to remind people of the city's significance.

"Fort Worth's story has been almost forgotten," Mayor Betsy Price said during Thursday's ceremony.

Don Woodard said he attended the breakfast and remembers that Kennedy wouldn't put on a cowboy hat that was presented to him, despite cheers from the audience. Kennedy told the crowd that he would wear the hat the following Monday; instead, Woodard went to Washington, and watched the hearse pass by, he said.

"The sadness and the devastation of what happened in Dallas overshadowed everything else. ... Now I'm glad it's here for history," he said, referring to the tribute.

Valenciano's daughter, Jodi Perry, was 8 years old when she went with her mother to hear Kennedy speak in Fort Worth. She held a sign, "Welcome to Texas, Jack and Jackie," and said the event changed her life. After the speech, she returned to school, where just hours later students were told of the shooting and attended a special Mass to pray for Kennedy.

Valenciano already was involved in politics, the Viva Kennedy club, and Perry said she had helped her mother with activities such as voter registration. Perry later cofounded the Tejano Democrats of North Texas.

"That day propelled me to be involved in civil rights and other important issues," Perry said.

A bronze statue of President John F. Kennedy stands in downtown Fort Worth as part of the JFK Tribute that was dedicated Thursday.

Students walk on water for class assignment

The Associated Press

MIAMI — Students from Florida International University have been walking on water for a class assignment.

To do it, they wear water shoes that they created.

The students had to make it to the other side of a 175-foot lake on campus Thursday while wearing the aquatic shoes in order to earn an "A" on the assignment.

Alex Quinones was the first to do so in just over a minute, earning himself $500 and major bragging rights.

A total of 79 students competed in the race.

Architecture professor Jaime Canaves says the annual race is a lesson in life as well as architecture. He says he wants to show his students that as long as they research and test their work, anything is possible — even "walking on water."

Friends thought Indiana teen dead after text hoax

The Associated Press

FISHERS, Ind. — An apparent text message hoax had many friends and classmates of a suburban Indianapolis teenager believing he was dead until he boarded a somber school bus.

Word of 14-year-old Michael Sinkfield's death spread over social media after a text message was sent from his missing cellphone Sunday night by someone pretending to be his father saying he had died in a car crash, The Indianapolis Star reported Thursday.

As Michael's friends at Riverside Junior High in Fishers told others, a picture of him soon had more than 2,300 "likes" on Instagram.

Michael said he lost his phone on Sunday. When he tried later to log into Facebook, he found his password had been changed and didn't know about the messages of condolence being posted on his Facebook page before he headed to school Monday.

"When I got on the bus in the morning people were looking at me happy, but other people were crying," Michael said. "I asked them what was going on, and they told me what happened."

Classmate Micah Lee said some students had been planning to put flowers on Michael's seats in his various classrooms. When Micah saw Michael on the bus Monday morning, he said he gave his friend a hug.

"I was confused and didn't know what to think," Micah said. "At school, everyone was happy to know he was still alive."

Linda McKinney, Michael's mother, said she received a call from the school's principal on Monday morning, before Michael left for school, expressing condolences for the family's loss. He called back later apologizing for the mix-up.

McKinney said she would've been "in a panic" had she received the call after her son had left for school.

Hundreds mourn three killed in crash

ATTICA, Ind. — Hundreds of mourners turned out to remember a western Indiana couple and their teenage daughter killed when a combine smashed into their minivan last week.

Those mourners filed past photos and the caskets of 62-year-old Daniel Fox, 40-year-old Stacy Fox and 15-year-old Demara at Attica High School Thursday evening. A private graveside service was planned Friday.

Family member Jonathan Duncan tells the Journal & Courier that Demara's sisters — 17-year-old Demetria and 13-year-old Dakota — are talking and walking as they recover from their injuries at Riley Hospital for Children in Indianapolis.

Film team plans to re-enact 1988 crash

LEXINGTON — A film team making a documentary about the Carroll County bus crash that killed 27 people plans to re-enact the crash this weekend as it prepares the film for release next year.

The church bus was returning to Radcliff after an outing to Kings Island when the vehicle collided with a pickup truck being driven the wrong way on Interstate 71 by a drunken driver. It is considered the worst drunken driving crash in U.S. history.

The Lexington Herald-Leader says Lexington-based filmmaker Jason Epperson is looking for extras for the re-enactment. The film, titled "Impact: After the Crash," is planned for release next spring to coincide with the 25th anniversary of the May 14, 1988, wreck.

Center struggling to book conventions

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The man responsible for booking Nashville's $585 million Music City Center says the city is losing possible conventions because of a shortage of luxury hotels and that it should consider tax incentives to spur construction of another large hotel.

Butch Spyridon, president of the Nashville Convention and Visitors

Bureau, told The Tennessean the city is losing business because it can't piece together a "2,000-to-3,000-room block within a small enough number of hotels."

Red Bull Signature Series

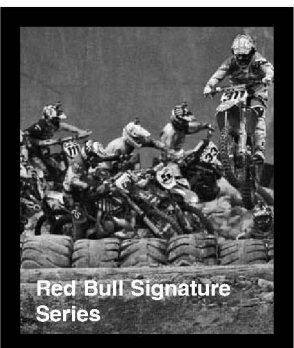

The best amateur moto-cross racers in the world converged on Loretta Lynn's Tennessee ranch in August for their national championships. Loretta's, as it's affectionately known, is the last step for these young amateurs before they graduate to the professional ranks. This year those riders included Cooper Webb, Anthony Rodriguez, Justin Hoefft and Doug Dubach.

Movie: The Christmas Consultant

Don't hassle the Hoff — hire him! This new comedy stars David Hasselhoff as a consultant retained by a workaholic mom (Caroline Rhea) who needs help getting herself and her family through the holiday season. He gets a little too far into the job, however, assuming the head-of-household role, but that turns out to be not such a bad thing.

7 p.m. on 10
Movie: The Wishing Tree

This new drama stars Jason Gedrick as Dennis Farnsworth, a professor who uses the town's local tradition of a tree adorned with handwritten holiday wishes to gather the "orphaned" students on campus who have nowhere to go during the holiday season. Erica Cerra, Emmalyn Estrada and Teryl Rothery also star.

8 p.m. on 14
Chicago Fire

The media and the department both react badly after Chief Boden (Eamonn Walker) orders his men to evacuate a warehouse fire, leaving a homeless man to die inside. Casey (Jesse Spencer) faces more pressure from Detective Voight (Jason Beghe) to leave his son's case alone. Severeide (Taylor Kinney) helps an elderly woman with a neighborhood problem. Shay (Lauren German) encounters her ex (Shiri Appleby) during a call in the new episode "One Minute."

8 p.m. on 14
Parking Wars

Anger management usually refers to managing one's own rage, but Detroit ticket agent Lashelle must bring the skill to bear on other people — specifically, citizens furious over receiving parking citations. On New York's Long Island, towing company owner Hadrick deals with shoppers upset over their illegally parked vehicles being towed, while Rob hands out tickets to bad parkers and worse drivers in this new episode.

9 p.m. on 14
Pit Bulls and Parolees

In this new episode, Tia and the twins undertake a tricky rescue mission by boat when a dog is reported abandoned in the swamps outside New Orleans. One of the parolees is pushed to the breaking point by the stress of balancing work and family life. Later, Tia and Mariah travel to Dallas to help a dog with only one chance to find a home.

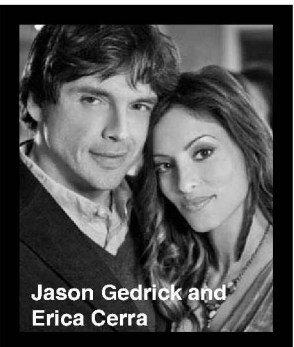

9 p.m. on 14
Doomsday Preppers Bugged Out

The new episode "Armageddon Inn" profiles "Calamity Janet" Spencer, who has prepared her home for nuclear war, and is inviting people to bunker down with her. She has pasta to feed 1,000 people. John Major moved his family to Idaho and is teaching his kids to eat insects to survive a dirty-bomb attack. And retired photojournalist Jack Jobe started prepping in 2010; he is getting ready for the scenario he fears most — a solar flare.

9 p.m. on 10
Movie: Chronicle

Superpowers aren't necessarily a benefit if you don't know how to use them properly, as the three comrades at the heart of this 2012 sci-fi tale learn rather quickly. Dane DeHaan, Alex Russell and Michael B. Jordan play the central trio, which largely uses the "Blair Witch Project"—"Cloverfield" approach of amateur videotaping to show the events as they unfold. The result effectively depicts ordinary people in extraordinary circumstances.

ACL Presents: Americana Music Festival 2012

This "Austin City Limits" special showcases highlights from the Americana Music Festival, which features American roots music. Hosted by Jim Lauderdale, it includes performances by Carolina Chocolate Drops, Richard Thompson, Patty Griffin, Alabama Shakes, lifetime achievement honoree Bonnie Raitt and more.

Movie: Payback

A double-crossed thief (Mel Gibson) finds out what his life is worth in this entertaining 1999 thriller from director Brian Helgeland ("A Knight's Tale"). It turns out to be $70,000, exactly half the proceeds from his latest heist, which is what his partner (Gregg Henry) and junkie wife (Deborah Kara Unger) tried to kill him for. Maria Bello and William Devane also star, and James Coburn appears uncredited.

Friends

Hank Azaria ("The Simpsons," "Mad About You") guest stars as Phoebe's (Lisa Kudrow) old boyfriend whose return to town causes a row between her and Joe (Matt LeBlanc) when she tries to cancel their weekly dinner. Rachel and Chandler (Jennifer Aniston, Matthew Perry) can't keep their hands off the yummy cheesecakes being delivered to a neighbor. Monica (Courteney Cox Arquette) tags along with Ross (David Schwimmer) to their cousin's wedding — just so she can give the bride a piece of her mind for not inviting her — in "The One With All the Cheesecakes."
